

Success for Faculty of Education colleagues in CUSU Student Led Teaching Awards

Congratulations to four Faculty of Education colleagues who were shortlisted in this year's Cambridge University Student Union (CUSU) Student Led Teaching Awards, across four different categories. This is an outstanding achievement for the individuals, and also demonstrates the high levels of student satisfaction across the Faculty.

Dr Philip Gardner, Senior Lecturer in the history of education, was shortlisted in the Lecturer category.

Dr Georgina Horrell, Teaching Associate in English and Director of Studies at Homerton College, was shortlisted in the Innovative Teaching category.

Lottie Hoare, a Research Assistant at the Faculty who teaches and supervises on the Undergraduate course, was shortlisted in the Undergraduate Supervisor (Arts and Humanities) category.

Dr Jo-Anne Dillabough, Reader in the Sociology of Education and the Sociology of Young People and Global Cultures, was shortlisted in the Teaching and Student Support category.

We are delighted that two of our shortlisted colleagues, Georgina Horrell and Lottie Hoare, were awarded Commendations at the awards ceremony. This is a real testament to the dedication both Georgina and Lottie have for their teaching, and the extremely positive impact this has on their students.

All shortlisted colleagues from across the University were invited to a prestigious awards ceremony on 9 May, hosted by the students themselves and opening with an address from Professor Graham Virgo, the University's Pro-Vice Chancellor for Education.

CUSU received over 600 nominations in this year's competition. The shortlisting of these awards were determined solely by students seeking to recognise 'outstanding teaching and student support' across the University of Cambridge.
