Confidentiality, Information sharing and networks around children: Good to talk, need to talk, want to talk

Saturday 28th April 2018 | 10am to 12.30pm

Workshop overview

This Cambridge Forum workshop will focus on children and young people where the level of need is below safeguarding but is of concern and where early intervention may prevent the need for statutory interventions.

Often such children already have multiple professional interventions in the family. Professional and organisational expectations, cultures and traditions can sometimes help and sometimes hinder helpful dialogue between professionals but such dialogue may be a positive route to preventing situations escalating.

This workshop gives a theoretical foundation to how we as practitioners might think about addressing these dilemmas, it will provide models of working together and ideas about the types of 'helpful conversations' that could be initiated. An experiential activity will help the theory connect to practice.
