Making sense of the internal world of the child with complex trauma

With Dr Renée P Marks

Saturday 15th November 2014
10am to 12:30pm

Overview

Working with children who have suffered complex trauma, where they have been repetitively exposed to neglect, abuse, domestic violence, bullying or similar painful circumstances can be very challenging.

The Cambridge Forum session will focus on the internal world of the child who has suffered complex trauma as well as how an integrated approach could successfully be used to help these children and adolescents.

Cooperation with the parents, carers and school will also be explored utilising case studies and practical examples.

There will also be a discussion on how the use of body focused activities and exercises can have the capacity to enhance emotional regulation and therefore aid therapy.
